Righteous discipline, hardship, the strengthening power of adversity

Korrash holds that strength comes only through challenge, and that those who have never suffered cannot understand or administer true justice. His followers practice severe personal austerity -- demanding first of themselves what they would demand of others. He is the god of hard lessons, of punishment that is meant to change rather than merely harm. Conduct: Live by strict personal discipline. Impose hardship only in service of growth or just punishment. Never inflict suffering merely for its own sake.
